

Dear readers,

Have you ever heard about the “fliegendes Künstlerzimmer”? Me neither until the house arrived at my school. It was fun watching the art works. But I never thought that I would one go inside that house. Let me tell you more about it.

A house not big looking, made out of wood, on rainy days also water spacing up on the roof. What could be so special about it? Then my English teacher decided that we will pay the artist a visit. On the inside that house looks way bigger than from the outside. And also, the artist named Dawid Liftinger was a really friendly person. He prepared something for us. Like an introduction to the new topic, we started in lesson. It was about racism and police violence against black people in America. Therefore, we watched a music video about the dark sides of America. The video showed that the US isn't only a peaceful country. No country can only be a peaceful country but still it showed me that the US can be way more different from what I had ever imagined. The second thing he showed us was a painting. An old painting named “the slave ship” there is a sailing ship on the painting which had a true story behind it. The story was interesting and showed me again how cruel people can be. The last thing he showed us was a pretty long video of the murder case of Halit Yozgat created by forensic architecture. The recreated the case until every tiny detail and thought about any kind of possibilities about who might have seen the murder. I liked the recreation about the scene and thought that all the technics they used were pretty interesting. It was like also being a detective on the case trying to find out what happened on the seconds of the murder. Another interesting point is that they reconstructed the store to have a better seeing of who saw what. At the end it was pretty clear that one of the people who went to the store was lying. He must have saw something of the murder but didn't tell that to the police.

In the end we discussed what all things he showed us had in commun. Which led to a discussion about the topic art. In my opinion all of that is art. Because art can have a lot of ways of showing.

What is your thinking about that? Can art be defined or not? Thanks for reading. I wish u a pleasant day.
